certain other medications.

Patients should tell their healthcare professional about all medicines and substances they use before starting oxycodone. They should also seek urgent medical assistance if severe breathing difficulties, extreme sleepiness, or inability to wake occurs.

Responsible Medication Use

If a healthcare professional prescribes oxycodone, take it exactly according to the prescription instructions. Do not share the medication with another person, take more than prescribed, or use someone else's prescription. Store the medication securely and dispose of unused medication through an appropriate medication take-back program or according to local disposal guidance.

When to Seek Emergency Help

Severe sleepiness, slowed or difficult breathing, inability to wake, or loss of consciousness can indicate an opioid overdose and requires emergency medical attention. If naloxone is available, it can be used according to its instructions while emergency services are contacted.
